Please could you give us a comment concerning the previous answer, if you think that the Matrix does not represent typical work processes of the respective field?
This type of questionnaire is known to us from student internships. However, the cognitive skills and attitude (will) be requested to the profession more. In the illustrated matrix, the stages of development ranging up to leadership skills. This can only be assessed in perspective for trainees. There are valued less the extent and quality of the skill. Example; Trainees are opting partly in your teaching at the end of the training and knowledge bearers and may lead. When changing to other companies, it depends on the size and organization and the demand for quality, in which levels of matrix staff can be arranged. Then you must be subordinate and, where appropriate, to further his career and personal. From my experience, I've noticed this is just a small part of the trainees willing to sacrifice for the profession much of life to climb higher levels. The decisive factors are the perspectives of the individual. Bring all good luck, career and life in harmony. The matrix is still helpful.

Do you think that the Matrix could be useful to map and define available skills and competences of future employees and/or students coming from abroad?

Perfectly fitting to the scope
Quite useful, with some limits	X
Partially useful
