

BACKGROUND

We all know that people are moving a lot across Europe nowadays – to work, to learn, or just to visit other places. Such mix of different nations and languages can be seen in many cities scattered across our hometowns. When a foreigner is not able to order a dinner in a local restaurant, or ask for directions - it is often an unpleasant experience, but without danger consequences. On the other hand, when a foreigner is being hurt and suffers from pain, then it is the role of paramedics to appear on the scene as quickly as possible and handle the communication with victims involved in a proper way.

ABOUT MEDILINGUA

Medilingua project is going to address this very crucial aspect of communication between a paramedic and the patient, by delivering a complete working environment focused on learning medical English. Specially designed courses will contain a number of podcasts to make the learning process simpler and more entertaining, and will be divided into five areas, each of them referring to specific group of patients: adults, children, infants, pregnant women, elderly people.

COOPERATE WITH OTHERS

Apart from the language courses all paramedics will be invited to exchange their knowledge, ideas and other information with their colleagues working in other countries. They will be also able to upload their own podcasts, for the benefit of all paramedics using the Medilingua learning environment.

The testing version of the learning environment will be launched in summer 2015
